1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the problem. It is shown that the problem is of great importance and that it has not been completely solved. The author then proceeds to a detailed analysis of the problem.
 He shows that the problem can be reduced to a system of equations. The solution of this system is then obtained by the method of successive approximations. The author then discusses the properties of the solution and shows that it is unique. Finally, he gives some numerical results and compares them with the results of other authors.

2. In the second part of the paper, the author considers the case of a more general problem.
 He shows that the problem can be reduced to a

The first of these is the fact that the number of individuals in a population is not constant. It varies from time to time and from place to place. This is due to a number of factors, including the rate of birth, the rate of death, and the rate of migration.
The second factor is the distribution of individuals within a population. This can be uniform, random, or clumped. The third factor is the interaction between individuals. This can be intraspecific or interspecific, and it can be positive or negative. The fourth factor is the environment. This can be abiotic or biotic, and it can be favorable or unfavorable. The fifth factor is the history of the population.
This can include past events that have shaped the current state of the population.
